

Keepers Of Society

By Cynthia Kyofuna

Let me tell you about the analogy of soldier ants.

Tuk Tuk Tuk, while in their colonies, that is their distinguishable sound to protect the colony, and help carry the heaviest loads of prey to the bivouac, and that is impressive

Ant colonies work together in a kind of hive mindset

Each ant has a very specific role, making the colony almost like one living organism

Not once will the smooth flow of the system be stalled because one ant requires a yellow envelope.

In their minds, they know my role contributes to the welfare of my society - whether small or big, it is a moving part.

Today's investment is invaluable to our country, Uganda, and will define what we look like in the next 5 or 10 years.

With impact unknown but hope held high, we all must strive to see a country where service is offered with respect and efficiency, with urgency and passion, and now
We Rise

The discovery of self is unending, me at 26, you at 43, the youngest Huduma Fellow at 4 months, we are all in a constant process of change and

As we explore ways to collectively impact the world around us, with our time, talent, and treasure, we must think differently.

“...It is not about what your country can do for you but rather what you can do for your country” (line 48).

The keepers, you keepers, are the remedy to the ills in society, speak out, seek out and engage even those with fragile egos.

Value requires cultivating and investment, an asset of great importance, people, we the people require a fueling to shift from potential to kinetic.

The love of money is the wave that swallows most gallant men even when the country is thirsty from a lack of organic, authentically engaged leaders who will advocate for systems-level change in communities.

The reform is not one of publicity or prestige but of justice and for humanity, for integrity and upwardness.

The future exonerates the keepers, the establishers of democracy and governance, the advocates of civility and respect of human rights, the ones that serve with no complaint and pave way for a prosperous future.

The world requires the best service and we must provide it

I applaud you Protectors of the economy, carriers of policy and the soldiers marching into an era of truth, justice and fairness.

For God and my Country.
